How big is disneyland and california adventure

A trip to Disneyland or Walt Disney World is unforgettable. Whether tied to the nostalgia of visiting as a kid or making new memories as an adult, the resorts hold special places in many people's hearts.Loyal fans can fiercely debate and enumerate the merits of each, like which has the best rides, fireworks and food. While both resorts are safe bets for any Disney lover, there are some objective differences travelers should consider when deciding on a destination. Here are some of the biggest distinctions between Disneyland and Disney World, as well as a little history on both resorts.►Disney World prices keep going up; Here's why die-hard fans keep going back►What can I get for free at Disney World?: 10 freebies you should know aboutLocation, location, locationFor starters, Disneyland Resort is in Anaheim, California, less than 30 miles from Los Angeles.Walt Disney World Resort straddles Bay Lake and Lake Buena Vista, Florida, near Orlando.Fun fact: Both resorts are in their state's Orange County►Come explore with us: Sign up for USA TODAY's Travel newsletterSize mattersAnother major difference between Disneyland and Disney World is size. According to Parksavers.com, Disneyland spans about 500 acres; Disney World covers more than 43 square miles of land, making Disney World much larger.Different parksCalifornia is home to Disneyland Park, Disney California Adventure Park and Downtown Disney District.In Florida, Disney World is home to Magic Kingdom, EPCOT, Disney's Animal Kingdom and Disney's Hollywood Studios. Disney World also includes Disney Springs, ESPN Wild World of Sports Complex, several golf courses, two miniature golf courses and two water parks - Typhoon Lagoon and Blizzard Beach.Places to stayDisneyland has three resort hotel properties: Disney's Grand Californian Hotel & Spa, Disneyland Hotel and Disney's Paradise Pier Hotel.Disney World has more than two dozen resort hotel properties, including Disney's Grand Floridian Resort & Spa, Disney's Contemporary Resort and Disney's Fort Wilderness Resort, which also offers campsites.Disney castlesThe featured castle is different at each resort.Sleeping Beauty Castle is the centerpiece at Disneyland Park. It's about 77 feet tall.At Disney World, Cinderella Castle is iconic of both Magic Kingdom and the larger resort. The castle is about 189 feet tall.Unique attractionsWhile guests at both resorts can enjoy Space Mountain, Haunted Mansion, Pirates of the Caribbean and "It's a small world," the versions are slightly different. Additionally, Disneyland is the only place for rides like Matterhorn Bobsleds, Storybook Land Canal Boats and Mr. Toad's Wild Ride. The Magic Kingdom's version of Mr. Toad's Wild Ride closed.Rides specific to Disney World include Spaceship Earth, Avatar Flight of Passage, Rock n' Roller Coaster and Walt Disney's Carousel of Progress. The Carousel of Progress made its debut at the 1964-65 New York World's Fair and lived at Disneyland before moving to Disney World in 1975, according to the attraction's webpage.Notable nicknamesDisneyland is known as the "Happiest Place on Earth."Disney World is called the "Most Magical Place on Earth." That magic carries into other titles, like Disney World's 50th anniversary festivities, which have been dubbed the "World's Most Magical Celebration."Which came first?Disneyland opened July 17, 1955. It was designed and built under the supervision of Walt Disney.Walt Disney World opened on Oct.1, 1971. Roy Disneyhelped design and open Disney World after his brother Walt's death in 1966. Its design was based on a plan called "The Florida Project," created by Walt Disney. Let's get one thing straight right out of the gate: A vacation to Disneyland or Disney World is always a good idea. Both theme parks offer days worth of fun for people of all ages thanks to thrilling rides, delectable foods, and an atmosphere of joy that will bring everyone right back to childhood. However, if you're deciding on a Disneyland vs. Disney World vacation, there are a few differences you should know about. Related: More Disney vacation ideas The Disney characters, Goofy, Pluto, Mickey, Minnie and Donald Duck in front of the castle at Disneyland in California If you're looking for history and nostalgia, Disneyland is the way to go. That's because it was Walt Disney's very first theme park, which opened its doors on July 17, 1955. At the time, the park only had a few areas, including Main Street, Fantasyland, Adventureland, Frontierland, and Tomorrowland. Though Walt Disney was involved in the ideation of Disney World in Orlando, Florida, he sadly died five years before its opening in 1971. Still, we like to think it lived up to his idea of what the Mouse House should really look like. Still not sure which Disney theme parks you want to visit? This guide compares Disneyland vs. Disney World vacations so you can plan your next trip to see Mickey and the gang. The Pixar Pier at California Adventure at Disneyland in California This one is fairly cut and dry. Disneyland is located in Anaheim, California, about an hour's drive outside the city of Los Angeles. The closest airport to the park is the John Wayne Orange County Airport (SNA). However, guests may find more direct routes and flight options by flying in and out of the larger Los Angeles International Airport (LAX). Disney World is located on an entirely different coast in Orlando, Florida. Orlando International Airport (MCO) is the closest airport to the parks. However, it's still fairly easy to get to Walt Disney World via the Sanford (SFB) or Tampa (TPA) airports as well. The two parks couldn't be more different when it comes to their sizes. Disney World covers an astonishing 43 square miles of land. Disneyland is just 500 acres — that means about 51 Disneylands can fit inside Disney World. Inside those 500 acres, Disneyland hosts two distinct parks: Disney California Adventure Park and Disneyland Park. For its part, Disney World hosts four main parks: Magic Kingdom, Epcot, Disney's Hollywood Studios, and Disney's Animal Kingdom. Both Disney resorts are worth visiting, but your decision might depend on how long you have to explore the parks. While it's totally doable to see all the main attractions at Disneyland in a day or two, you need close to a week to see everything at Disney World. Disneyland and Disney World both use dynamic pricing for theme park tickets. That means that ticket prices vary depending on the season, day of the week, and other factors. Theme park tickets at both resorts are pricey. Expect to pay over $100 for a one-day, one-park ticket, but exact prices will depend on your vacation dates and whether or not you splurge for Park Hopper to visit more than one park per day. Transportation around Disneyland is essentially a non-issue due to its smaller size. However, the park does offer free shuttle services to and from the parking lot. There is also a Disneyland monorail that travels between Tomorrowland in Disneyland Park and Downtown Disney. But, the need for transportation is extremely apparent at Disney World. Thankfully, the park fully takes care of its guests with a complimentary transportation system that can get them to wherever they need to be. That includes buses, a ferry, gondolas, or the monorail, which runs between two theme parks and three Disney-operated hotels. Disneyland may have a bit of an edge in this category as it's located in sunny Southern California, where the temperatures remain rather steady throughout the year. That said, it can still dip to around 50 degrees in the winters and reach well above 100 in the August and September summer heat. Disney World, on the other hand, is a bit more hot and humid during the summer months, making it a less-than-ideal time to stand for hours on end in line for a favorite ride. So, as far as the weather is concerned, both parks are best visited during the more temperate spring months. However, there are a few more things to think about when it comes to planning your park visit. Both parks can become unbearably crowded during school spring break times (in March and April). They can also become excessively crowded during holiday breaks (namely Thanksgiving, Christmas, and Fourth of July) and special celebrations (like Halloween). If you can, go during either park's off-peak times, avoiding popular holidays or the summer break period. That way, you'll be able to experience more of the park in a shorter amount of time thanks to fewer crowds. There are a few cross-over rides that you'll find at both parks, including the classics like Pirates of the Caribbean, Splash Mountain, and It's a Small World. However, each park puts its own spin on these rides so they're not exactly the same at each location. Thanks to its larger size and two additional theme parks, Disney World has nearly 50 rides while Disneyland has about half of that, so if you want lots of ride time, you might want to opt for the Florida parks. Related: Every Single Ride at Disney World, Ranked There are three Disneyland hotels on property: the Disneyland Hotel, Disney's Grand Californian Hotel and Spa, and Disney's Paradise Pier Hotel. Of course, there are plenty of non-Disney options within walking or driving distance of the parks, too. Epcot park at Walt Disney World Resort in Orlando, Florida Both theme park resorts offer stellar performances, parades, and character sightings throughout the day. At night, the party continues with shows. Exact offerings are subject to change, so check the Disneyland and Disney World entertainment schedules to see what's going to be available during your visit. Disney World debuted a new nighttime spectacular, Disney Enchantment, at Magic Kingdom in honor of the park's 50th anniversary. Walt Disney World castle at Magic Kingdom For both amusement parks, the castle is at the center of it all. Disneyland's Sleeping Beauty Castle is 77 feet tall, while Disney World's Cinderella Castle at the Magic Kingdom is more than double that height at 189 feet tall. But hey, it's not a competition pitting princess-against-princess, right?
